To whom it may concern:

I am asking you to grant the liquid manure licensure to the Hensons. I have been in meetings with the Hensons and seen the results of studies done that show their farm has little to no negative impact on the environment of their area. They are good stewards of the land and are conscious of the need to use practices that are proven to be beneficial to the environment. They work hard to maintain a productive farm within the framework of good environmental practices. They need this permit to continue to do so. Your decision affects all farmers in Arkansas as to their right to have the necessary support to farm. Farmers are the original environmentalists. Over the decades as new scientific research has become available, they have willing left behind practices that are harmful to the environment for better practices to protect it. The cooperation the Hensons have given to use these practices show their willingness to do what is best for their community as well as their farm operation. They have gone above and beyond what is expected.

Sincerely,
Danna M. Cofer
