Farm Bureau sets 81st convention in Little Rock, Dec. 2-4

LITTLE ROCK — Farmers, ranchers and agricultural leaders from across the state will come together for Arkansas Farm Bureau’s 81st annual convention, set for Dec. 2-4 at Little Rock’s Marriott Hotel and the Statehouse Convention Center.

Gov. Asa Hutchinson, Arkansas Farm Bureau President Randy Veach, agricultural advocate Kevin Murphy and farmer-comedian Tim Moffett headline the speakers for the convention, which is expected to attract more than 1,000 farmers and ranchers.

The convention’s theme, Growing for Tomorrow, will be reinforced throughout the convention’s three-day run, including several conferences, competitions and special meetings.

The event culminates with the organization’s annual business session, where voting delegates will define the organization’s policy positions on items of importance to Farm Bureau members. The delegate body also elects the organization’s president and vice president.

“Our convention reflects things that are meaningful to Arkansas Farm Bureau members,” said Veach, a cotton, rice and soybean farmer from Manila (Mississippi County), who is concluding his seventh year as president of the organization. “Our focus will be on the issues facing farmer and ranchers, and understanding how those issues will impact agriculture in the future.”

Special conferences are scheduled that will address timely topics such as EPA’s waters of the U.S. proposal, international trade issues, federal farm programs, labor challenges, avian influenza and weed control advances.

Additionally, there will be commodity market outlook conferences, as well as sessions dealing with rural health issues and the latest on drone technology.

The convention will spotlight the winners in several different competitions among Farm Bureau’s Young Farmer & Rancher members.

Awards will be presented to county Farm Bureaus for their work in support of the organization’s agricultural advocacy and membership efforts, along with recognition for ArFB’s Ag in the Classroom teacher of the year, the ag education instructor of the year and its Agvocate of the Year. The top county Farm Bureau women’s program and Sew with Cotton contest winners will be named and the organization will recognize the recipient of the Stanley E. Reed Leadership Award.

Arkansas Farm Bureau is a private advocacy organization of more than 190,000 families throughout the state working to improve farm and rural life.

Pike County’s David Terrell was among the 73 Farm Bureau leaders participating in the State Resolutions Committee meeting Nov. 4-5 at the Wyndham Riverfront Hotel in North Little Rock. The committee refined and consolidated policy proposals into a set of formal recommendations to be considered by voting delegates during the business session of the Arkansas Farm Bureau State Convention, Dec. 2-4 at the Marriott Hotel in Little Rock.

Doing more than giving thanks

LITTLE ROCK -- In my family, Thanksgiving has always been a day for food, fellowship, and football. During the holiday season, family members are busy with activities like cooking the Thanksgiving feast, taste-testing homemade pies and throwing the football around with the grandkids. But as we make our preparations for this year’s Thanksgiving, we cannot forget to be grateful for our many blessings.

Here in Arkansas, we have a lot to be grateful for. Our state is known for its thriving agricultural community, vibrant tourism industry, breathtaking scenery and, especially, its people. We can be thankful for a year of economic growth, the creation of new jobs statewide and greater opportunities for our students and citizens to succeed. And let’s not forget to give thanks for thrilling Razorback victories over Ole Miss and LSU.

As we celebrate and give thanks, let us remember to reach out to those who may be struggling during this joyous time. For some, the holidays can be a difficult time of the year. Those in our local communities may be suffering loss, loneliness, hunger or financial hardships. These people need our prayers, our kindness and our support.

Here at the Capitol, my staff is holding an office food drive to help fight senior hunger. Many of you may be doing similar work to help the men and women in your lives at offices, schools and churches across your community. Among other things, Arkansans are naturals at helping out.

One of my favorite authors, Henry Van Dyke, once said, “There is a loftier ambition than merely to stand high in the world. It is to stoop down and lift mankind a little higher.”

This time of year isn’t just about giving -- it’s about doing. For those who are able, I encourage you to find opportunities to serve others who may not be able. For those who plan to gather with family and friends, I encourage you to include people who may be alone during the holidays. Sometimes, all it takes is a warm welcome and a good meal to make a positive difference.
