Storm drains not trash cans

Spring in

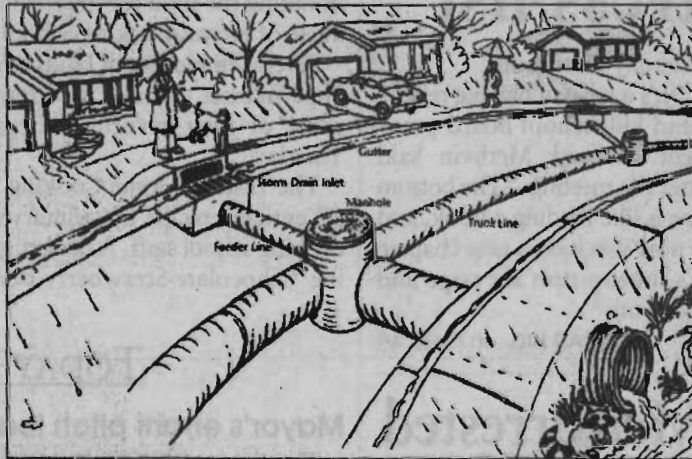

Special to the Times/Rick Maples

Ever think of what happens to that water that you see going into a storm drain during a rainstorm?

It goes to Crooked Creek, either direct or through other means, such as Dry Jordan.

Storm drains are separate from sanitary sewers and do not receive any treatment. That means whatever washes into the storm drain, such as litter or anything that gets into its path, goes directly to Crooked Creek if it is not caught in the storm drain.

City employees must clean out what is caught in the storm drain and this costs the city time and money.

Special to the Times

Everything that goes into the storm drains eventually finds its way into the environment.

please do not litter.

It's not only costly, it's against the law and hurts our environment.
